UNCLE GROUCH PAYS A VISIT TO LULU AND LEANDER

Copyright, 1945, by the American-International Pictures Corp. Great Britain Rights Reserved

1. LULU: "Leander, Uncle Grouch will be here in a few minutes to pay us a visit. Now be very careful, do everything possible to please him, for he is immensely rich and I expect to inherit all his money."

LEANDER: "Lulu, by the time I get through with Uncle Grouch he will be so delighted with me that he will wish he had five times as much money to leave you."

2. LULU: "Oh, Uncle Grouch, we are AWFULLY glad to see you. How kind it was for you to come. We are simply DELIGHTED to have you with us for a while. Let me take your coat and hat."

LEANDER: "Welcome, thrice welcome, Uncky. By Jove! we certainly ARE glad to see you. Now, Uncky, we are going to make you right at home."

3. UNCLE GROUCH: "Better let your man carry that trunk up stairs. It is very heavy, as it contains a lot of silver plate and cut glass I am going to present to you."

LEANDER: "Not on your life, Uncky. No hands but mine shall touch this precious burden. Nothing is too much trouble for me to do for you, Uncky."

4. LEANDER: "Ye gods! It slipped!"

UNCLE GROUCH: "W-E-O-W! W-E-I-L-O-W! O-U-C-H! My goshy toot!"

LULU: "Oh, Leander, what have you done to poor dear Uncle Grouch?"

5. UNCLE GROUCH: "You varlet! You villain! Try to kill me before I am here five minutes! Talk that and that, and THAT!"

LULU: "Oh, Leander, who did you do it? WHY did you do it?"

LEANDER: "I didn't!"

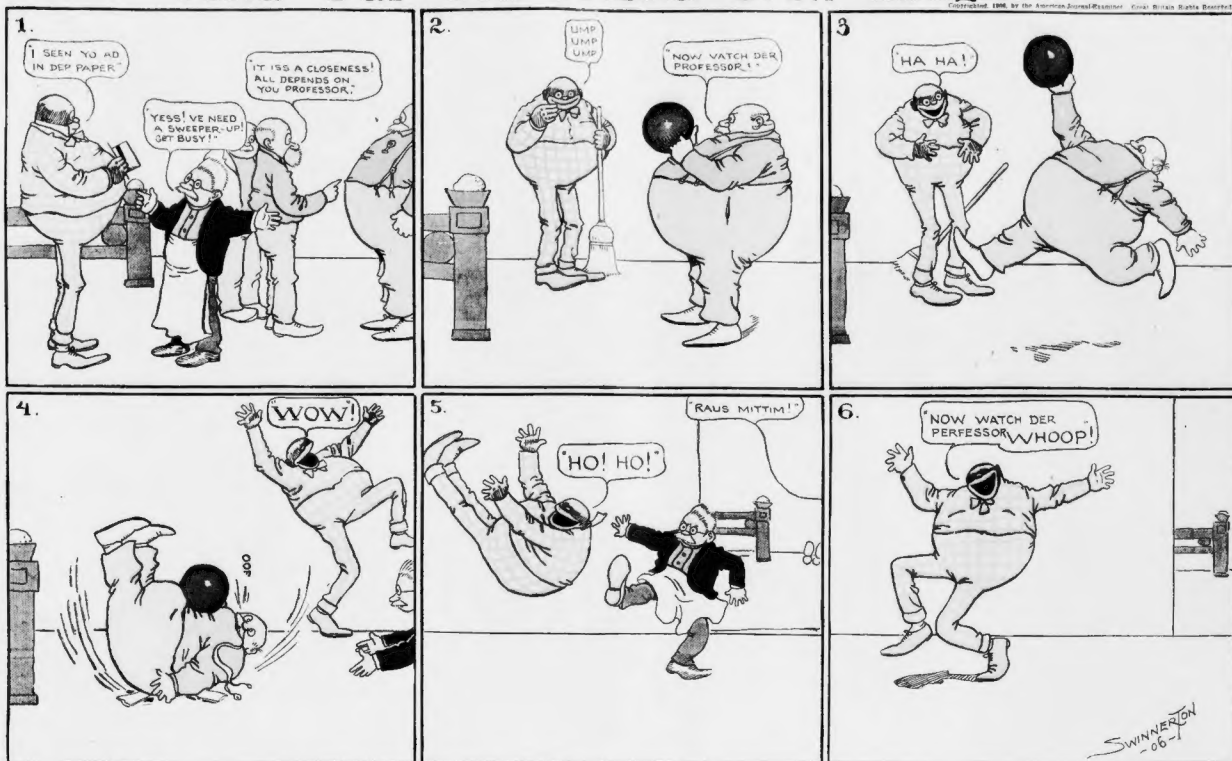

6. UNCLE GROUCH: "Send that trunk down to the station right away. No cut glass or silver for you. Neither do you get one penny of my money. Any nice of mine who would marry such an imbecile as that deserves no consideration whatever!"

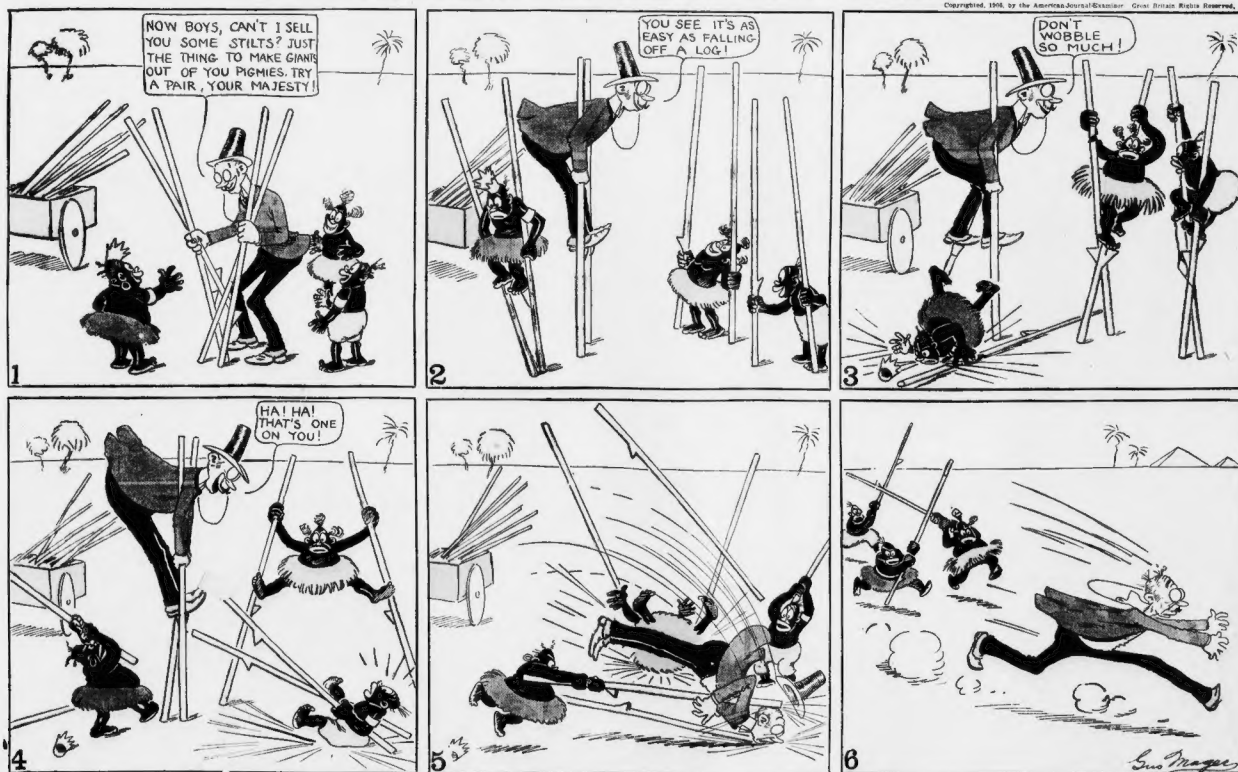

LULU: "Oh, Leander, this is awful! How could you?"

LEANDER: "Ye gods! Wealth, riches, going! going! GONE!"

M R. HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY, who is perhaps the most popular delineator of the American girl, has now made his appearance as a writer upon the subject. He furnishes the text of a charming and auspicious volume entitled "The American Girl, as Seen and Portrayed by Howard Chandler Christy." It is published by Moffat, Yard & Company, of New York.

The book is illustrated with forty pictures by the distinguished artist, most of which are reproduced in colors, and three of them are presented here on this page. Mr. Christy discusses the American girl in all her most interesting aspects, and uses his own pictures to illustrate what he has to say. For instance, he has chapters on "The Sweet Girl Graduate," "The Debutante," "The American Girl in the Country," "The American Girl in the City," "The American Girl in Society" and "The American Girl as a Model."

Mr. Christy has probably studied the American girl extensively more than any living man, and he now shows that he has an astounding knowledge of the thoughts that are passing through her mind and of the causes that have produced her charms. He is an expert in the highest sense. He is a keen analyst and at the same time a whole-souled optimist. His introduction contains a masterly general appreciation of the American girl, in the course of which he says:

"Never before has the world offered full opportunity for the perfecting of the highest type of womanhood ever before have the selected individuals from all the races of the world been brought together under such conditions as to come to the best of which they are capable. And apart from sentiment, uninfused by any narrow patriotism, trying simply to see clearly the causes at work and their necessary results, we may confidently declare that the American girl of the future will become a veritable queen of the highest of races."

Mr. Christy's book is probably the most eloquent panegyric ever written upon the charms of the American girl.

ASKED FOR DESIGN BECAUSE SHE IS SO PRETTY EVERYONE FALLS IN LOVE WITH HER.

And Now a Big Political Rumpus Threatens Hammond, Ind., Unless the School Superintendent Bows to the Will of the Whole Population, Expressed in a Monster Petition, and Brings Back the "Sweetest" Schoolma'am They Ever Had.

"Everybody loves me," said Genevieve McGraw, the prettiest and sweetest schoolma'am of Hammond, Ind.

"That's just the trouble," answered School Superintendent C. M. McDaniel. "Therefore, you must resign."

It is the most famous design which has set the throbbing manufacturing city of Hammond, Ind., in an uproar, which has aroused members of families against each other, which has started many social feuds, and which threatens to make a political issue.

Superintendent McDaniel asked Miss McGraw to resign, giving as his reasons that she was too popular and had too many social duties outside of school hours.

And Miss McGraw has resigned. Now the people of Hammond have started a monster petition for her reinstatement. It is to be signed by every pupil in the Hammond, Indiana, schools, all the leading men, ministers, bankers, physicians, society women and public officials.

"If every man, woman and child in Hammond signs the petition, I will not hesitate," Miss McGraw, says Superintendent McDaniel. "Neither will I file a resignation against her."

And the cause of all this uproar is a demure, eighteen-year-old, little schoolma'am, to whom the people of Hammond have given the high-sounding title:

"The Girl Who Is So Pretty That Everybody Falls in Love with Her."

She is Genevieve McGraw, Ind. schoolma'am, Genevieve McGraw, whose fascinations cause the male population of all ages to gaze in love with her.

Miss McGraw is a Wisconsin girl. She went to Hammond at the beginning of the present school year from West Superior, in that State.

"Really, we must engage this young woman."

Superintendent McDaniel has now changed his mind regarding the chief item of a teacher's assets.

"The trouble is that these magnetic personalities attract other people besides the children," he says.

And it must be admitted that his words are true. Miss McGraw has a model record. She never missed a day at school. Never was late. Never neglected a pupil.

She never allowed her social duties to interfere with her professional work. She was a model of propriety. She was received in the best social circles of Hammond as a favorite.

But—

Neglected Their Business.

The young men of Hammond neglected their business. They were not allowed to side the school house, but they used to make long detours in order to walk by the building, in hope of catching a fleeting glimpse of Miss McGraw's pretty dark head at a window.

They vied with each other in showering invitations and attentions upon the young woman, the pretty school teacher's hand.

She looked like a homely woman most of the time, so numerous were the floral bouquets sent to her, while as for candy—

"She is pretty, this Hammond, Ind., Schoolma'am, Genevieve McGraw, whose fascinations cause the male population of all ages to gaze in love with her."

Soon no social function of Hammond was complete without her.

Now, just where the serpent entered the idea of what form he took no one has been able to definitely discover.

One theory of his coming is almost too absurd to contemplate.

But there are whippers in Hammond that cause the other school teachers of the west to look on her with envy.

They are the young men, mind you, but nearly everybody else in Hammond.

She has been called Hammond's girl, the young woman who looks on the bright side of things and her Irish ancestry gives her the rare gift of humor.

Everybody fell in love with her.

Not only the young men, mind you, but nearly everybody else in Hammond.

Why Men Are Afraid To Get Married.

There is a story that one day a woman closes a solitary course because, in the estimation, matrimony is too expensive.

This argument is the well-thought-out and generally accepted one that the cost of the wedding is too great for the ordinary individual to supply.

With a shrug of his shoulders he passes all thought of marriage into the background of his mind, and the matter is closed.

But there are others who would marry. They could be convinced that such is the case, but they are afraid to get married.

Miss McGraw, from Her Latest Photograph.

What One Man Did to Win the Girl He Wanted.

"Oh, by the way, Count," says the object of his adoration, "this is my husband."

"But you were to marry me," he shrieks.

"Yes," says Mrs. Gibbons, sweetly, "but I just changed my mind, you know."

1—When She Was Being Carried Off to France by Papa and Mamma to be a French Countess, He Married Her on the Sly and Sailed on the Same Ship.

2—Meeting the Count on the Pier at Havre, He Laughed and Said: "Glad to Meet You—This is My Wife."

3—He Fought Three Duels with the Count's Friends, "For the Honor of France," Making Himself Solid with Mamma and Papa, and Now Has Brought Home His Bride in Triumph.

LITTLE Miss America, with a tremendously rich papa and an ambitious mamma, how would you like to have all this happen to you and about you all in a single Spring and Summer? Your debut just made and you find yourself both a belle and made in love with the American boy sweetheart of your second days.

You are carried off to France to forget And a real French Count falls on your doorstep and breaks his leg, and to please papa and mamma you promise to be his Countess.

While you are back home in America preparing for the wedding, and the Count, alluring in the eyes of the Browns—all great shooting in South America, your ex-sweet Miss Ella, who resented defiance of sweetest claims you, and you jilt the Count and marry him, and arrange him aboard the steamer on which your anxious parents are waiting to return you off in triumph to society, who, in the person of the Count, is then at Havre waiting on first one foot and then another in his impatience.

With the ship well out of sight of land you introduce your husband, and your mother has a slight hysterics.

Joe, French Harve and the Count weep and challenge your husband to a duel, and then you away, after facing things on that wherever you go there are several French men eager to challenge your husband for the honor of France, and he has to fight three times and dodge other Frenchmen who were eager to kill him.

All this and much more really happened to pretty little Mrs. Joseph A. Gibbons and her husband, who have just returned to this country. Mr. Gibbons still keeps looking around furtively for challenges. Mrs. Gibbons gives a shudder whenever she hears a word of France, and Mrs. Gibbons's papa and mamma wouldn't come back at all. Fate, petting, pleasant and filled with the spirit of high adventure in Mrs. Gibbons before she became a bride was Ella in Brown, of the Wallingford Browns, the Agency, hotel, broker and Chubb Brown, her father being William M. Brown, a millionaire, and as such at home on his estate in France as in America. Mr. Gibbons is a leader of Miss Ella's set. Mother of Paul Wellington Gibbons, holder of the tennis championship of Dejeu.

was Count, treasurer of a big publishing house, and very rich himself. The real beginning of it all was three years ago when Miss Ella went to her mother and said:

"I want to marry you. I want to marry him. Do you mind?"

Mr. Brown did mind and said so. He did not mind Miss Ella, who resented defiance of sweetest claims you, and you jilt the Count and marry him, and arrange him aboard the steamer on which your anxious parents are waiting to return you off in triumph to society, who, in the person of the Count, is then at Havre waiting on first one foot and then another in his impatience.

Then a lot of ice came to the nobleman's face. He stopped, felt, broke his leg, and when he was away from the setting he was in the house of the Browns and the daughter of the house of the Browns was waiting for him like a ministering angel.

The Count sighed contentedly. It was a great change, and countenance was a slight limp in coming around.

When it did come, behold, Miss Ella just happened to become the Countess. She was not out of the running. "You see I hadn't heard from Joe for so long," says Mrs. Gibbons, on board the steamer. "I hadn't heard from Joe for so long," says Mrs. Gibbons, on board the steamer. "I hadn't heard from Joe for so long," says Mrs. Gibbons, on board the steamer.

To Joseph in Philadelphia, came tonight, maybe it was from the lady herself; she didn't say. At any rate the next day saw the Countess. Mr. Gibbons on board the steamer for Havre. Count Bloch, filled with sentimental joy, thought he'd try his luck in South America while his fiancée prepared for the marriage. Count Bloch sailed for South America on the very day the Gibbons left with a network. The acute parental Brown and Bine and even the Countess started right in to see him last ground. He didn't go, and it wasn't long before the Browns quietly slipped out of France and fled to America with the lady. Gibbons followed straight after.

"That night two immaculately dressed Frenchmen appear at the hotel. For the honor of France and the Count they say Mr. Gibbons must die."

"It was funny," says Mrs. Gibbons, "that night two immaculately dressed Frenchmen appear at the hotel. For the honor of France and the Count they say Mr. Gibbons must die."

Almost as soon as the Count, he places a despairing Brown crashed home there land to his forehead.

"That you were to marry me!" he shrieks. "Yes," says Mrs. Gibbons, sweetly, "but I just changed my mind, you know."

The Count grows impatient, weeps, throws his glove in Mr. Gibbons's face, double over their heads, and sticks a right arm jab from that gentleman's return to France. A cable and demands his card. Mrs. Gibbons again to the Count sent him his card. Mrs. Gibbons again to the Count sent him his card. Mrs. Gibbons again to the Count sent him his card.

French expletives and mumbled time for the counting to his desire.

Toward the day before the taking, appear at the hotel. They are vengeful, came to the Browns in the afternoon a telephone call from Mrs. Ella.

"Oh, mamma," she said, "I don't intend to die, says in good earnest. I must go to the dock in New York to-morrow morning."

New Yorkward went the Browns. Darned the day of the sailing. Tip to the pier dashed a cab. Out has been implored him to just punch the Count and not shoot, sternly blame her goodness and wanders forth to the globe.

He waits. There comes a Count. He waits longer, still no Count. At last the Count's daughter, and Joseph, hungry, stepped their daughter and the smiling Mr. Gibbons.

"Oh, mamma," said the daughter, "I just want to tell you that I have brought my husband along, too. This is he, Mr. Gibbons."

Mr. Gibbons bowed. Mr. Brown, who is a good fellow, roared. Mrs. Brown nearly fainted.

"And there isn't really a bit of use talking," continued the new Mrs. Gibbons, "because the captain won't stop the ship, and Joe can't walk ashore, and I wouldn't let them on him, anyway."

Mr. Brown grew hysterical. "That the Count?" she gasped. "He's waiting for us at Havre."

"Waiting at the church, waiting at the church," hummed Joe, and felt his blouse. "He's awfully terrible, and he'll do something awful, I know," wept Mrs. Brown.

"Oh, leave that to Joe," said her daughter, severely. "Just leave it to Joe," murmured Mr. Gibbons, also severely.

Now, Havre house in sight. As the steamer warps in there disappears itself from the crowd a gallant cattle figure, in large black hat, advertising gravel, charming buttonholes and all the pomp and pageantry of just before wedding days.

One hand it waves a huge bunch of roses, in the other is a quality fluttering handkerchief. The figure is almost dancing. It emits strange noises, and around it stand a group of earnestly studious observers.

"It is the Count," is the chorus from the Browns, just as though they were in a comic opera.

It is the Count, and as the Browns come down the gangplank, he rushes toward but instead almost embraces Mr. Gibbons, whom tennis has taught to be quick.

"Oh, by the way, Count," says the object of his adoration, "this is my husband."

"But you were to marry me," he shrieks. "Yes," says Mrs. Gibbons, sweetly, "but I just changed my mind, you know."

To Search in the Arctic Ice for Her Lost Lover

Though Reports Have Told How He Died and Was Buried in the Frozen North, His Voice and Loved Face Have Come to Her So Often in Visions That She

Will Not Believe Him Dead and Will Soon Go to His Rescue.

ENA LAND—that is the name of this modern Joan of Arc who hears the spirit voice calling to her. But there is this difference—the spirit voice does not tell Ena Land to rise, gird on armor and go forth to save her country. It bids her hasten up into the frozen North, where spectral and deadly face the Arctic wastes, to save and bring home the man she loves. In the dead of night, at dawn and at dusk the voice comes to her.

"They have said that I am dead. It is not true. I live, but I need you. Try and come to me."

For a long time she doubted, as people do in this condition and mental age. The voice came within her own distraught brain. There was no voice except the loved voice that had been in her memory's voice. Instantly he was dead, as report said—because he could not resist her soul in her great love. The vision and the voice continued to torture her.

For weeks and months she argued with herself, and the vision still came, and the voice grew reproachful.

"Do not listen to what men say. They have their own motives to speak falsely. I live, and I need you."

As it was with Joan of Arc as it was with Ena Land, people came to designate words and craftiest men. Both doubted long, but before to close their eyes and sleep. As the vision grew clearer and the voice more distinct the doubts of both vanished.

Joan of Arc gave herself to France, and through her France was saved. Just as Ena Land will trust herself to the Arctic where he roges about the Arctic North, and believes she will save her lover.

His Voice Rings in Her Ears.

While she makes her preparations the little and slightly vision grew clearer. She saw the man who loves lying ill in a desolate hut, with the frozen north pale in the light that the long Arctic Winter has come. Sometimes she even saw him rise feebly and hold out his arms, and the voice rings in her ears:

"Because we have each other as much I feel my spirit go out to you, and I do not despair, for of late I have felt your spirit near me, and then I know I have not died out to you in vain. Come, dear one, now quickly, and it will not be too late."

Now that she is convinced that her lover lives and is calling upon her to come to his aid, she has no more doubts. She has seen the long, dangerous journey, Ena Land with all these things quite calmly, and with such earnestness of purpose, she has seen that the vision and the voice are real. At first those near to her said:

"It is only a dream, child."

But she would answer:

"The dreams repeat themselves day by day, by night, and with great clarity."

"You are overwrought by death, and you are seeing things that are not real," they said. "You are seeing yourself to die a will."

But, very soon, Ena Land's delicate little woman, hardly more than a girl, will set forth bravely to follow the vision and the voice. She believes that they will guide her at every step of the long journey. But she has seen that the vision and the voice are real. At first those near to her said:

"It is only a dream, child."

Klonika. There willing hands will have done and done ready, loaded with provisions and everything joyful for the voyage, and she counts upon the vision and the voice, which have filled her with hope, and she has seen that the vision and the voice are real. At first those near to her said:

"It is only a dream, child."

But she would answer:

"I promise that if my body cannot come or send to you my spirit shall meet yours, and you shall not be left in doubt."

She was surprised. He was a great, strong, healthy, wholesome man, and she had been afraid to mention in his presence that she was in doubt. He was a great, strong, healthy, wholesome man, and she had been afraid to mention in his presence that she was in doubt. He was a great, strong, healthy, wholesome man, and she had been afraid to mention in his presence that she was in doubt.

"I believe it with all my heart, little one," he answered, looking at her fondly.

"How long have you believed it, dear?"

"Ever since I knew that you loved me," he answered.

"Not ever since you knew that you loved me?" she asked, with a loving girl's mischievousness.

"Ah," he returned, "this is a matter where perfect reciprocity is essential. If I did not know that you loved me how could I have confidence to send my spirit out to you? And if you didn't love me you would neither recognize my spirit nor send forth your own to me. There must be a perfect understanding. Both must look into each other's eyes. This is the only way to know that no distance can wholly separate them."

"Do you feel that it is true with our souls, dear one?" she whispered. And he answered:

"I do, and I will never believe otherwise until you tell me with your own lips that you are mine—that you do not love me."

"You, George, if you should fall ill up to that terrible country, and you were alone, how could I hear not to know your trouble as that I might plan to aid you?"

"Ah, we are not already in spirit!" he said, holding his glowing eyes upon hers. So when there were weary weeks during which she had no word from him at her side, and spirit were disappointed to miss his impulse that he might send forth. They wrote about it, and in letters both renewed that promise of the night of their parting. This is an incredible story. Surrounded by incredulity, it was hard for her to believe at first. But who can shut their ears to the voice of a loved one? Their eyes to the spirit of the one most loved? And so Ena Land became the modern Joan of Arc.

The report, corroborated by later advice, that George Daniel Craman had given up the fight and had left himself down on the snows of Alaska, and died, and had been buried by his sledging companions, does not weigh with Ena Land against the evidence of her vision, and loved voice that has come to her so many times.

"I know I can find him," she repeats over and over again.

She has another and more practical reason for believing him to be still alive. Physically, he was the best ideal of Alaskan explorers, a youthful giant, seasoned by rough adventures in many lands. She knew him well. Ena Land and he met, and he had just received his discharge from the regular army, with which he had served as a light artillery in the Philippines. Prior to that he had been a border ranger in Australia.

It was late at first night for both when he met Ena Land. For the first time since he could remember, adventure for adventure's sake pulled on him. Ena Land's father was a rich man, with important business connections in New York City, and he approved of the young man.

But the youth—he was only twenty-five—could not dream of marriage until he had earned out a fortune with his own hands—his own fortune for her. This he would not attempt in any other way. Alaska and the gold fields called to him and he

The first news of her lover's death came to Ena Land more than a year ago, when she had not heard from him for several months. She started on a journey with her companion, nearly a year, and finally brought to her from Inuit an alleged statement from George Daniel Craman's sledgeing companion, that he had died somewhere off in the interior of Alaska and had been buried there. It was about this time that the vision and the voice began—and this caused her to believe more firmly each day that the man she loved was not dead, but was in trouble and was keeping his promise of years ago to communicate with her through the medium of their two united spirits.

She is going to Alaska in obedience to her lover's call. Will she return? And what marvellous story will she then have to relate? Times are questions that cannot be answered for many months to come.

Just as she is starting for Alaska on her ward quest, Ena Land is heartened by news of the recent return to his home in Ansonia, Conn., of Thomas Minnie, who went to the Klondike eight years ago and was supposed to be dead. As Minnie walked up the main street from the depot to the home of his sister, he noticed that the people stared at him and followed him.

"What are all you people staring at me for? Am I not glad to see my sister?" he asked. He didn't get any satisfaction in their answers and he entered the yard and rang the bell. His sister Minnie opened the door. Thomas sprang forward to greet her. Minnie fell in a dead faint, and the long-lost brother stood astounded. Those who followed him to the house asked him if he did not know that he had been pronounced as dead four years ago, and that funeral services had been read and a tombstone, inscribed with his name, erected on the family plot in his memory.

Minnie could not believe them at first. But his sister revived, but it was a long time before she could believe that it was Thomas in flesh and blood.

Four years ago word was received that he and his companions were caught in a mountain storm and drowned.

Thomas has a different story to tell. He became separated from his fellow-travelers and went prospecting on his own account. To make the romance more complete he brings back a chest full of gold. It is not false gold in amount, but it is enough to keep Minnie and his sister from wanting for the rest of their days.

Ena Land, Whose Lover's Spirit Voice Calls Her to the Klondike.

How Science Explains It.

THE REV. C. FERNAND BAIN, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Waterloo, N. Y., has recently stated a scientific truth when he said:

"When I burned our dear church, God knows I was my other self sometimes I am a monk and always followed of Jesus—other moments I am the helpless slave of the Devil God."

The beautiful, rich and aristocratic Baroness Von Wrede put in her own words what recent scientific experiments have confirmed when she declared:

"If I stole the silverware of my house I did it under an impulse which was against my desire and my conscience. I am sometimes the victim of the wicked side of my otherwise worthy self."

And when Miss Fongren, the rich, petted and indulged stage favorite, was caught stealing trinkets of little value, she said what science now admits:

"Ah! how would I steal those things when I have everything I want for the mere asking—I must be really a living case of what the savants have called a 'Jekyll-and-Hyde'."

And so it is that we have of those who lead a "double life." Some, indeed, are hysterics who use one life as a cloak for the other. But with a great many—probably a majority—there is a second being in their body who at intervals returns like an unwelcome stranger to the control of the mind and all its faculties.

The astounding discoveries which painstaking scientists have made concerning what they term "dual" and "multiple personalities" are almost incredible to any one who does not know how the facts were obtained.

It is now generally believed that any normal human mind can be dissected or split up into two or more personalities whose habits, desires and characters are as different as those of people selected at random from a crowd. Accident, sickness, fright, heredity and many other things may cause this strange thing to happen to the reader or anybody else.

THE HUMAN BRAIN IS REALLY TWO COMPLETE BRAINS.

THE CHAMELEON WHICH HAS TWO PERMANENT PERSONALITIES.

When the mind of a man, or a woman, or even an animal is at ease, it is still in only two personalities, one of these new minds is almost certain to be a higher, purer and better character than the normal one, but the second personality is proportionately worse. Unfortunately the brain and body seem to work more smoothly with the wicked self than when under the control of the other.

If the normal person had occasional headaches, dizziness or neuralgia before the disintegration, then those like will appear while the better self is in control and the evil self will be free from them.

And now let the explanation. What is it that happens inside the skull of a good woman as she sits writing an affectionate letter to her mother or comes out to sleep, her body dupes herself as a servant girl, obtains a position at a hotel, and embarks in a course of petty larceny, though she could have anything in the world from her husband for the asking?

The reason, according to neurologists, lies in the history of the growth of the human brain. Ever since animal life on the earth began to develop from the first simple living thing in the form of a tiny cress of living jelly up to ourselves, the process has been one of adding new parts to the old. A human being contains the brain, so to speak, of all his ancestors. He has the rudimentary nervous system that served the jelly blob for a brain, and on top of that the more highly developed brain of the fish, and over this comes perhaps that of the first animals, and then the ape-like creatures which were our forerunners.

The first creature who could really be called man was supposed to have appeared about 500,000 years in the hunting and fishing stage. During this long period man developed the frame and muscles which, as Professor Wollaston of Dartmouth College, says, "make him entitled to considerable respect as an animal." But at the same time it implanted in him those tendencies to murder and violence and straying which keep the police busy at the present day.

Gradually people here and there found that the promise of peace were profitable and proceeded by restraining their inherited impulses. As these men grew wiser their example spread and the descendants found it less and less difficult to restrain themselves, and thus civilization grew.

This meant the growth of a new brain area, a new personality, added to the first lot of brain, which held a prehistoric control of the body and its functions through the older brain from which it grew. How far these two parts must have been can be inferred from the fact that almost anybody, even in our present advanced state, can be goaded into a state of murderous fury in which the lower brain shakes off the control of the higher one and resumes their ancient domination of the body.

When Our Ancestral Brain Controls.

Then you behold temperately the semi-human animal of the hunting and fishing stage. He is liable to this coherency or reason clearly; he grins his teeth, howls like a gorilla, but his strength is also the strength of a wild man, with all those filthy animal instincts. For the lower brain controls the muscles, and when they are running the body on their own hook they accomplish monstrous wonders which the higher brain could not get them to perform at its bidding.

In other words, the habits which preserved ancient man's life and made it possible for his race to continue are the ones which creep out now and make the criminal waste his life behind the bars and it is in the electric chain.

If disease seizes the brain, it goes to pieces from the top—that is, the latest additions lose their grip first, and, piece by piece, honesty, morality and restraint of all kinds disappear and the patient drops back to the material state of the wild man, and far beyond it, until he is only an unreasoning, lawless, helpless idiot, representing the vegetable state, until there are only senseless brain areas left to make the organs perform their vital functions.

When the disease passes beyond this point death puts an end to the prehistoric revolution.

The different areas of the brain are connected with each other by a complex system of fibers. Disease, worry or shock may destroy some of the connections and thereby put some parts of the brain out of touch with the others. Sometimes the brains are temporary or periodic. In that case, the personality will be normal when the connections are working properly, but at other times he will not be his real self at all. Moreover, the brain is made in duplicate.

There is a complete thinking and motor apparatus on the right side of the brain and another one on the left. But the two halves are not exactly alike—one side is almost always larger and better equipped than the other. In most people the left hemisphere of the brain predominates. As the left side of the brain controls the right side of the body this side is usually a little bigger and stronger. For that reason most of us are right-handed.

In some animals the separation and independence of the two hemispheres is more marked than in man. For instance, there is the chameleon. Often the left eye of this creature will be seen closed in sleep and the two left limbs clinging motionless to its perch, while the right eye and limbs move restlessly about. Scientists have demonstrated that this is caused by

Don't Disregard the Danger Signals on Your Way

There Are Many of Them and They Can Be Easily Understood

At regular intervals along every well-equipped railroad line, and always at the approaches of the curves, semaphores are set—THE DANGER SIGNALS that tell the engineer whether he can safely continue the terrific speed of his trainload of passengers.

Besides knowing all about his engine, the engineer must know those signals as he knows the alphabet. Upon his ability to read them at a glance—to see that the green light and the yellow arm mean "Go slow" and the red light and red arm mean "STOP"—depends his fitness as an engineer, and incidentally the lives of the people in the coaches behind him.

You would hardly trust yourself to an engine driver who depended solely on the track ahead—who felt safe in running at a high speed because the track was clear AS FAR AS HE COULD SEE IT. The employment of that kind of men would speedily fill the right-of-way of every railroad so full of wrecks that the public would as soon think of travelling on it as going to sea in leaky, open rowboats.

But the road that people travel toward the success they are all striving for is set with danger signals at every turn, yet the habit of disregarding is too common to attract attention.

Men who are tremendously in earnest about their ambitions and their desire to provide for their families do not think it necessary either to understand their own physical machinery, as an engineer must understand his engine, or to know where to look for the danger signals, or what they mean.

In the parks of Boston, and of every great city, you see scores of poor, desolate human wrecks sitting or sleeping on the benches, their usefulness gone, their ambition dead. They are there because there is nothing else to do—NOTHING ELSE THAT THEY CAN DO.

These men—failures, many of them, because of whiskey or gambling—are as plainly danger signals to the passer-by as are the red semaphores raised warningly over a railroad track. To the man hurrying across the square to take a few last drinks with the boys before going home they say: "Go slow, there is trouble ahead on that track."

To the man who thinks it will add a little spice to life to play a few dollars of his week's wages in a poolroom, the mute figures of the poor "bench-warmers" say "STOP."

Heed that warning if you are one of those who have not learned to know danger signals.

Look at their helplessness, their WORTHLESSNESS.

Once they were men, many of them able and of good earning capacity.

They ran past the danger signals, believing the track was clear BECAUSE THEY COULD NOT SEE THE PITFALL AROUND THE CURVE AHEAD.

There were plenty of wrecks to warn them then, as now, but, lacking the wisdom to heed, they went on, until they came into collision with the inevitable and themselves became warnings for other men.

It is not alone in the parks that the danger signals are set. Every man can find them if he looks about him; and it is pathetically easy to understand their meaning.

The FAILURES that you know, the men who have MEANT to succeed but have failed because of indolence, or conceit, or DISHONESTY, all point the way to the WRONG TRACK.

You do not need to know, of course, all the wrong tracks, or why they are the wrong tracks, any more than the pilot of a river steamer needs to know the location of every rock, shoal and sand bar in the waters he navigates.

The pilot needs only to know WHERE THE DEEP WATER IS.

And you, travelling on your way to success, need only know THE RIGHT TRACK.

All the others are labelled.

Pick up any newspaper and the story of some suicide will tell you of a bank clerk who tried the road to dishonesty and found an open bridge.

Go to the race track, or watch the crowd coming from it, and the haggard, hunted faces of scores of men will warn you against the gambling road.

In any great office you will find old, bent, tired men, still holding poorly paid positions, because indolence or conceit has led them astray, and because they did not use their intelligence to read the warnings of others as you can read the warning THEY give.

The hospitals are full of hopeless incurables who have run past the danger signals of excess or neglect of health or such eager pursuit of pleasure that they have forgotten to get enough sleep.

If all the danger signals of life could be daily explained, if they could be labelled with their meaning in large letters, few men would dare disregard them.

But success in this life means the use of intelligence and the ability to depend ON YOURSELF for the information you need.

The engineer before he is competent to run an engine must KNOW EXACTLY WHAT EVERY SIGNAL MEANS.

He must not mistake the warnings set against other trains for those meant for him. He must not mistake a signal that says "STOP" for a distance signal that bids him go slowly.

But his knowledge of the system must be complete and exact, and always ready for instant use. On the semaphores that he sees raised or lowered are no letters explaining to him the exact nature of the trouble ahead. They are not lettered at all, but it is a part of his business to read them as clearly as though each one was a message explaining fully why he should halt or slow down his train.

It is a comparatively simple matter for him to understand the system, but no simpler than it is for men and women to understand the system provided for their guidance.

We are given eyes and ears to help us on the right road, but they are useless without INTELLIGENCE, which is more generally called COMMON SENSE.

EVERY WRONG TRACK has its semaphore. Do not think you must explore any of them a little way, to run just a few hundred yards past the signal in order to satisfy your curiosity.

If you are going to any worthy destination, and GOING THROUGH ON TIME, you had best keep to the main track, reading wisely the signals on the way

WHEN silence flees before the voice of Love,
Of what expression does that god approve?
Is dulcet song or flowing verse his choice,
Or stately prose, made regal by his voice?
Speaks Love in couplets, or in epics grand?
And is love humble, or does he command?

HERE is no language that Love does not speak:
To-day commanding and to-morrow meek,
One hour laconic and the next verbose,
With hope triumphant and with doubt morose,
His varying moods all forms of speech employ.
To give expression to his painful joy,
To voice the phases of his joyful pain,
He rings the changes on the poet's strain.
Yet not in epic, epigram or verse
Can Love the passion of his heart rehearse.
All speech, all language, is inadequate,
There are no words with Love commensurate.

The Importance of Trifles

Little things are the backbone of life. They are the threads that weave the fabric of our existence. Without them, life would be a chaotic jumble of events. It is in the trifles that we find the true meaning of our lives. A single flower, a single bird, a single moment can hold the key to our understanding of the world. We must learn to appreciate the small things, for they are the things that truly matter.

The Judgment of the Garret

The judgment of the garret is a story of a woman who lives in a small, cluttered room. She is surrounded by books and papers, which are her only companions. She spends her days reading and writing, and she finds a sense of peace and purpose in her solitary life. Despite the hardships of her situation, she remains optimistic and hopeful. Her story is a testament to the power of the human spirit.

Dorothy Dix. A famous advice columnist, she has helped millions of people with their problems. Her advice is always practical and helpful, and it is given in a warm, friendly tone. She has a way of making even the most difficult problems seem manageable. Her columns are a source of comfort and guidance for many people.

The Child Study Fad

The child study fad is a phenomenon that has captured the attention of many people. It is the idea that children should be studied and their behavior analyzed. This has led to a lot of controversy and debate. Some people believe that child study is a good thing, while others believe it is a waste of time. The truth is, child study can be a valuable tool if it is done correctly. It can help us understand our children better and make them happier.

Society News and Notes

The most recent of the many social events in the city was the giving of a dinner at the Hotel Newbury Park, on Saturday evening, December 7, by the Boston Chamber Music Society.

The dinner was given in honor of the return of the Remondini Orchestra of Milan, and was attended by a large number of guests.

The dinner was given in the ballroom of the hotel, and was a most successful one. The orchestra played a number of the best pieces of chamber music, and the dinner was most enjoyable.

CONSTIPATED OLD AGE

Means misery on the eve of life. Nine out of ten old people are constipated because the muscles of their intestines have become weak, worn out and flabby. Constipation is the curse of old age, causes bile and acid poisons to remain in the blood, making the skin yellow and wrinkled, the eyes bleary and causing the "bones to ache."

Keep the bowels strong, healthy and regular and old age loses all its terrors and weaknesses. No reason why grandpa and grandma shouldn't have bright eyes, and clear, ruddy skin and feel lively and active, if they will only keep their bowels open and vigorous with CASCARETS CANDY CATHARTIC, the greatest bowel tonic ever heard of. Try them to-day—a 50c box—a whole month's treatment—and find that the tortures of constipated old age are

"I Am Going to Run This City for Benefit of Citizens," Declares McCarthy.

ASKS PROMINENT MEN TO SERVE AS ADVISORS

Providence, R. I., Dec. 7.—Mayor McCarthy has issued a public protest against the "ice-box" cars and the "L" road. He declared that he was going to run the city for the benefit of the citizens and asked prominent men to serve as advisors.

The mayor's protest was issued in a letter to the city council. He declared that the "ice-box" cars were a nuisance and that the "L" road was a danger to the city. He asked the council to take action against them.

The mayor also asked prominent men to serve as advisors. He named several men, including Judge F. J. Connelley, Mayor William W. Brewster, and others.

PROTESTS AGAINST INVASION OF CHURCH

Rev. Father Joseph T. Sullivan, pastor of St. Joseph's R. C. Church, has issued a public protest against the invasion of the church by the "ice-box" cars.

He declared that the cars were a nuisance and that they were invading the church. He asked the city council to take action against them.

What Sulphur Does For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal remedy for all ailments, from the common cold to the most serious diseases.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable and convenient form, and the results are far more effective than the old-fashioned remedy.

Shop Early---Only Two Weeks More Before Christmas

Every minute counts---every day will see the Christmas crowds growing greater and the advantage of shopping early will never be more appreciated than during the week beginning tomorrow. Shop early in the morning and shop early in the week if it is possible. Already every foot of space in our holiday sections is occupied by the afternoon. We are prepared to do the greatest Christmas business New England has ever known during the last two weeks before Christmas---and we respectfully request the shopping public to help us make our work as light as possible for our salespeople. This can be done by making purchases early.

LLOYD UNDERWRITERS ASKING VERY HIGH RATES

Special Cable from the Hearst News Service.
London, Dec. 8.—Japan and the United States occupy the almost undivided attention of the European press. There is no question of the fact that these two powers bulk big on the world's political horizon, and while America is kindly dealt with there is every evidence that Japan is becoming a spectre to the continental mind.
This has not been due exclusively to President Roosevelt's message, though that document has served to rekindle discussion concerning the program of the Tokyo government. It is a widespread distrust of Japan exists and Mr. Roosevelt's glowing eulogy of the Japanese nation and its history is not appreciated outside of London. It is the alleged intentions of the Mikado to use the Japanese navy as a base of operations for the conquest of the Pacific.
